Many students in Japan attend public secondary schools. They study subjects such as Japanese, maths, science and English. Schools have libraries, gyms, computer rooms and courtyards. Students usually clean their classrooms and have lunch at school. After lessons, they can join clubs such as basketball, art, music and origami. They also take part in school festivals, sports competitions and cultural events. These activities help them develop new skills and make friends.

My name is Lukas, and I attend a Gymnasium in Germany. I study subjects such as German, maths, science and English. My school has a library, science labs, a gym and a courtyard. After lessons, I sometimes join the music club or play football with my friends. However, I often feel stressed before exams because I have a lot of homework and want to get good grades. My teachers encourage me to plan my time and take breaks. On 3 October, German Unity Day, our school is usually closed, but we learn about this important day in history lessons.

1. What kind of school does Lukas go to?

2. What subjects does Lukas study there?

3. What does Lukas join after school?

4. Why does Lukas feel stressed?

5. How does Lukas cope with stress?

6. Do people in Germany celebrate a national day?
